MORE PEOPLE HEARD FROM

NATIONAL THEATRE. JEFFERSON. On the Subject of the New License Tax Bill.
Mr. Christman, restaurant-keeper, corner of Eighth and L streets southeast, was well satisfied with the bill. He thought that the one isted with the bill. He thought that the one privilege extended salour-keepers of not being compelled to bring a list of signers every time a license was asked for, unless complaint had been made, was worth $50 in limit.

5. E. Shields. Supported by his Company of Recognized Artists in a Grand Double Hill.

S. E. Shields,
grocer and itsuor dealer, corner of Eighth hore pretty hard on small dealers. "Of course," said he, "the large dealers want the personal tax abolished, but that was much easier for the small dealers than this new it-

E. M. Roteler,

E. M. Reteler,
undertaker, No. 735 Eighth street southeast:
"I think there should be no tax on an undertaker's wagon any more than on his heares, but otherwise I am well satisfied with the bill. I am glad to have the personal tax system and one which shifted the burden of taxation on the shoulders of the more honest men. It is imperficilly carried out. It is agreent inconvenience and is not executed according to law by the Government officers thomselves. I will not be affected myself much by the bill. I will have to pay about the same tax I do now, but I should rejoice to see the system done away with."

Mr. Joseph W. Arnold, grocer, No. 505 Eighth street southeast, spoke freely in condemnation of the bill. "It is all in the interest of the rich houses. It's the rich against the poor again. I find in taiking with the smaller deelers that they all have that opinion. Many say that if the bill passes they will not get their goods from the wholesale dealers here, but will go to Baltimore.
The bill is oppressive ou the smaller places, but relieves the richer ones of some of their present burdens."

Mr. E. J. Burtt.

Mr. E. J. Burtt.

Stationer, No. 300 Seventh street, thought the bill had the same tendency as all legislation for the past twonty-five years—it would make the poor poorer. Its result, he believed, would be to crush out many small dealers. It was pishinly in the interests of the larger shops, Personally he would be affected very little, but he regretted the tendency of the bill.

Mr. S. I. Mitchell. druggist, Seventh street southwest, had not given the matter match attention. The present tax on druggists he thought too oppressive. They had to pay a personal tax and take out a fleense, too, which he thought too much.

They had to pay a personal tax and take out a Heense, too, which he thought too much. Here too, which he thought too much. Here to seventh and a salcon-keeper, corner of Seventh and M streets southwest, and that he thought the bill was a step in favor of monopolies. He believed the wholesale liquor dealers could better afford to may $500 for a license than the retailers could $150. He knew there were lots of retailers who couldn't afford to pay the $150 license.

Mr. John B. Mangurm, grocer and liquor dealer, corner of Seventh and H streets southwest, said he thought the bill extended more privileges to the rich than to the poor. He thought the bill was too eppressive to the latter. He knew that here were many retailers of liquor who could harely afford to pay the $100 tax now levied, If it should be increased to $150, they couldn't pay it and would sell without a license. The District would lose—not gain. The increase would induce great dishonesty. He believed the poor should be favored, rather than the rich.

What Mr. M. I. Weller Says.

A Cautto reporter called upon Mr. Weller of the firm of Weller & Repett, cigar and tobacco manufacturers. Mr. Weller said whils the bill suited him, he thought the proposition to levy a tax upon every person in business was a bad one. "There are," he said, "several thousand stores kept by poor people, whose stock in trade in some cases, amounted to less than $50, while others of this class have only a trillower that amount in stock. There poor people will find it hard indeed to meet the required tax—$10. If that clause relating to these folks, is eradicated, the bill ought to pass. If not, I hoped it is defeated.

A number of other gentlemen, whom The Cautto reporter saw, agree entirely with Mr. Weller on the feature of the bill. Eccentric Comedian, Vocalist and Enriceque Artist,

Mr. Frank Sperry's Horsemanship

Mr. Frank Sperry's Horsemanship. Brooklyn Times.

Writing of horseback riders reminds me of a runaway incident that occurred the other sterrocon, in which Mr. Frank Sperry, of Brooklyn, who is the private secretary of Secretary Folger, and a fine equostries, played a rather imporiant part. A young gentloman was out riding with a young lady well known in Weshington society, in the extensive park in which made the Soldiers' Home. The lady's horse became unmanageable, and ran away. Her escort attempted to make his horse keep pace with his companion's, but was wholly unside to so, as its rider had lost all control of the animal and thought only of keeping herself sealed in the saddle. Left to itself, the runaway seen distanced the gentleman and dashed on with the frightened young lady clinging to the bridle and saddle as best she could. Some gentlemen in a carriage made a feeble attempt to follow the horse and its holpiers rider, but they, too, were left benind, and the only real chase was that made by Mr. Sperry, who happened to be riding in the park, and, learning something of the fueldent, put spurs to his horse and followed in hot pursuit. The lady, it appeared, was throwe, after retaining her seat for a mile or more, and the house pursued its mad gallop rideriess. Mr. Sperry assisted the isdy until the arrival of her recort, and then followed up the vanaway and anacceeded in capturing it about a mile and a half further on. Fortunately the lady was not hurt, but she was most thoroughly frightened by the accident. Such episades are not of frequent occurrence, for as a general role the horse was their riders.
